Reported Discovery of Diamonds at Eldorado Bar, Fourteen Miles From Here.

The Buzz Saw Gets in Its Work and the Mangled Victim is Now a Corpse.

A Freight Train Runs Into a Handcar and Injures a Number of Laborers.

Excitement ran high in Helena Sunday over the reported discovery of diamonds at Eldorado bar, fourteen miles northwest of here, beyond the Missouri river. Several parties were hurriedly sent to the place to stake out ground, and by this time the section is undoubtedly laid out in claims.

George F. Fote, who has a splendid record of Montana sapphires and garnets, most of which were found in the vicinity of Eldorado bar some time ago, received Saturday from New York two stones which he went to be cut, and he was surprised to learn they were diamonds. It is said he was offered $10,000 for them. He has been offered $10,000 for them. He has been offered $10,000 for them.

Two years ago the finding of corundums at Eldorado bar created a big excitement. The discovery was made by Marcus Lester was in New York city he had one of these stones cut by J. Verrington, a big diamond dealer. Mr. Verrington upon examining the stone in the same place found it was a diamond.

It was also, as garnets and sapphires always exist in diamond fields. The stones in Mr. Fote's possession were found by Robert Smith in Eldorado bar. A number of nice stones have also been found at French bar, on the south side of the Missouri river.

KILLED BY A SAW. An unfortunate victim of the "buzz" in a mill.

O. J. Kellogg, an unmarried man about 40 years of age, was accidentally killed yesterday afternoon at C. Hartwell's sawmill, on Buffalo creek, about eight miles southwest of Helena. He was in the act of trying to cut a piece of shaft from one side of the bench, through which a large circular saw passed. He made a mistake and fell on the saw, which severed his right arm, cutting through the right side of his body to the hollow. The saw was quickly stopped and the man removed. He was conscious and his last words were, "I'm no longer, and my God, what pain." He lived about twenty minutes.

Judge Sanders, acting coroner, and Undertaker Seibert left for Helena to investigate the cause of the death. The body will be brought to Helena for interment.

Nothing is known of Kellogg's relatives. He was well known here and at one time worked for J. G. Ziegler.
